The Review of Economic Conditions in Italy was founded in 1947 by the economist Costantino Bresciani-Turroni, with the aim of informing the international community about the actual conditions and growth prospects of the Italian economy.

In the course of the six decades and more that have passed since then, the Review has become a solid reference point for people who are engaged with Italy and need to make well-informed decisions.

Today, in the light of the new challenges that face Italy in Europe and beyond, the publication's scope also embraces the economic policy debate, enriching its role with new significance.
